

Provided/Given/Supplied are three maps illustrating what the village of Kelsbey looked like in 1780, 1860 and 2000 respectively.

In 1780, Kelsbey had only 100 homes, but it had a large expanse of woods in the eastern part of the village and four plots of farmland in the middle. In the west there was a river running from north to south.

The year 1860 saw/witnessed a doubling of the number of homes, but the size of farmland and woods was reduced by half. In the same year, a bridge could be seen over the river and a road was constructed linking the river to the residences (住处、住宅).
Home=residence=residential area

140 years later, the number of homes more than doubled to 500, but farms and woods completely (完全地) disappeared. Several school buildings and sports facilities (设施) were constructed in the south-eastern corner of the village, which were connected with the residential area in the north by (在...旁边、附近) a newly-built (新建的) road. Some shops opened up along the river bank and a large stretch of (扩展、延伸、连绵) wetland for birds was established at the southern end of the rivers.

Overall, the three charts depict the huge changes taking place in the village during 220 years.
